50X1-HUM

Brodnice

A unit of Soviet Signals troops is located in the machine factory 'Unia' in ul. Lidzbarska. It occupies half of the building and numbers about 15 men, who have one armored car, one large truck, and one light car at their disposal.

In the garden adjoining the factory is a large bunker which was erected by the Red Army during the war. It protrudes only half a meter above ground and is always guarded by a sentry. The bunker contains signal equipment.

8. General Information on the 9th Infantry Division: One third of the officers are to be transferred to other regiments. There appears to be a decrease in the number of Soviet officers holding junior appointments in the unit.

9. Morale: The discipline among men billeted in barracks is generally improving.

10. Training: Special stress is now being laid on the training of sappers in all divisional DOW units.

Because of lack of adequate instructors efficiency is at a very low standard. Systematic training is hampered by the fact that men are being posted away from their stations on various "political actions" (campaigns) and also because they spent much time on political- educational matters. Very little time is left for military training -- as much time is spent for administrative work and political activities.

11. Political Education: Officers for political matters give two-hour lectures twice weekly in addition to a half-hour talk on political matters each morning.

The subjects are adapted to the requirements of the moment. All instructions are issued by so-called "regimental tutors" (lektorzy). Lectures and their subjects are checked up by the regimental Deputy Commanding Officers for political matters.

During the elections "special brigades" were dispatched into the country for carrying on propaganda work and to combat the opposition Polish Peasant Party ("P.S.L").

12. Uniforms and other equipment: There is a lack of footwear and thick blankets.
